Living More Fully in the Shadow of Mortality and the Unfinished Business of the Second Half of the Journey

James Hollis, Ph.D.

Friday November 15
from 7-9 pm

Saturday November 16
from 9 am – 1:15 pm

Friday Night Lecture: Jung observed that “Life is a short pause between two great mysteries.” That fact is not in dispute; what matters then, is how we live that pause. E. M. Forster observed that the two who could most illumine us, the corpse and the baby, are not talking. Given that mortality frames our journey, how might we live it more fully, not defined by fear, morbidity, and denial? What attitudes and practices allow us to live more fully? And what psychological maturation bring us to experience this short pause as rich with meaning?

Saturday Workshop: Tiny, dependent, and at the mercy of the world around us, we all have to adapt, adjust, bury, deny, split-off and repress, and thereby lose contact with our own sovereignty and natural source of guidance. The core project of the second half of life is the recovery of that source. This workshop will focus on twenty-one steps we may take toward the recovery of our personal journey.

James Hollis received a doctorate in literature from New Jersey’s prestigious Drew University and taught humanities for 26 years in various colleges and universities. In 1982, he earned his Diploma in Analytical Psychology at the C.G. Jung Institute in Zürich, Switzerland.

He is presently a licensed Jungian analyst in private practice in Washington DC, the Executive Director of the Jung Society of Washington and Vice President Emeritus of the Philemon Foundation, a group of scholars, board members, and donors who share the mandate to prepare the unpublished works of C.G. Jung.

Dr. Hollis is the author of fourteen books and over fifty articles and has mentored Jung societies on four continents for nearly forty years.
